Thus in much of Africa, which relies overwhelmingly on rain-fed agriculture, resource conflicts are more likely to arise over land, while in the irrigated fields of Central Asia, conflicts are more likely to arise over discrete water sources.